

Deborah Dennis Meola is a college coach with over twelve years of experience working with high school students, empowering young adults to advance their writing and communication skills to improve their college opportunities and their success beyond. Ms. Meola created and facilitated an annual Rutgers University Peer Mentor Retreat for Second Year Medical students, a college coaching program for United Way of Mercer County focused on college attendance, essay writing, financing education, and designed a summer program with Princeton Public schools and the Princeton Children's Fund to increase low-income and first-generation transition plans to college. She has worked with the W.E.B DuBois Scholarship program, Mill Hill Development Center, and Boys and Girls Club of Greater Mercer County.

Ms. Meola works as a professional writer and journalist for 37 years, with experience in book publication, newspaper, press packages, business writing, technical writing, and electronic newsletters. She is the co-author of Preparing for Leadership: What it Takes to Take the Lead; the Conference Board's report on Global Climate Change Initiatives. She is an award-winning writer-producer starting her career at NBC News where she worked on Decision '84. She interviewed, wrote, and produced AIDS: You Can't Catch It Holding Hands with Dr. Mathilde Krim of AmFAR -American Foundation for AIDS Research. She is a founding member of Sourland Hills Actors Guild, Montgomery's Community Theater where she produced musicals with community members from 8 to 80.